

ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Gil Stevenson is a Yale graduate who has tried his hand at a number of things, including a motorcycle agency and some ill-starred ventures in steam automotive development work. He has also been a lathe hand, a hydraulics technician in a metallurgical laboratory, and a technical writer. In 1965 his lifelong interest in linguistic studies led to his present part-time teaching position at the University of Wyoming.

Mr. Stevenson is married and has four children. In his spare time he pursues his linguistic studies, publishes a newsletter for the Unitarian-Universalist Fellowship of Laramie, Wyoming, tinkers in his electronic workshop, enjoys motorcycling and bicycling—and writes poetry.

World and Word, a collection of his essays and papers on epistemology and linguistics, was published by Dorrance & Company in 1969.
